

Skin Cancer Concepts for the Primary Care Provider

October 16, 2021

A Virtual Event | 10:00 AM-1:30 PM EDT

Program Description

All physicians should be able to identify & know how to treat cutaneous malignancies. Melanoma incidence in particular is increasing in this country & clinicians should be aware of the diagnosis process, pathology, identification on exam, & management of tumors. The goal of the program is to help strengthen knowledge about fundamentals of cutaneous oncology for primary dermatologists, dermatological surgeons, oncologists, & primary care doctors to be able to work together as a team to effectively treat patients with skin cancers.

This virtual educational activity will educate primary care clinicians & other non-dermatology providers on the fundamentals of cutaneous oncology. The program will commence with a broad discussion on the common types of skin cancer & progress into a more in-depth discussion on advanced concepts that should be understood by the primary care clinician to effectively co-manage patients that are undergoing advanced therapy. All information will be presented in the case-based format.

Target Audience

Primary Care Clinicians & Non-Dermatologists throughout the US.

Learning Objectives

- At the conclusion of this activity participants should be able to:
- Understand how to diagnosis and treat the early stage of the common types of skin cancer
  - Comprehend the most current management approach to patients with advanced disease
  - Identify ways to improve the access to care and the care process for patients with skin cancer and patients at risk for skin cancer
